

MIMIC CITY

Game Vision & Pitch Document

Tagline

One of these civilians is a real player. Find them before they disappear into the crowd.

What is Mimic City?

Mimic City is an online multiplayer social deduction game where detectives investigate a living city while hidden Mimics blend seamlessly into hundreds of AI-controlled civilians.

Unlike traditional social deduction games, the Mimics are not pretending to be other players. They are pretending to be ordinary citizens.

Every match becomes a dynamic detective story where observation, teamwork, and deception matter more than combat.

The Fantasy

Imagine you're walking through a busy city.

People are shopping.

Some are eating at cafés.

Others are waiting at bus stops.

Children are feeding pigeons.

Office workers are rushing to meetings.

Everything feels normal.

But one of those people isn't an AI.

They're another player.

You don't know who.

They don't know if you've noticed them.

They are trying to complete their objective while looking completely ordinary.

Your job isn't to shoot everyone.

Your job is to notice the one person who doesn't quite belong.

Why This Game Is Different

Most social deduction games ask:

"Which player is lying?"

Mimic City asks:

"Which civilian is actually a player?"

That single change transforms the entire experience.

Instead of watching six people in a room, you're observing an entire city.

Every person becomes a suspect.

Every crowd becomes camouflage.

The World

The game takes place in colorful, low-poly cities filled with life.

Each match contains approximately 80–200 civilians depending on the map.

Every civilian has routines:

- Going to work
- Shopping
- Sitting on benches
- Reading newspapers
- Talking to friends
- Waiting for buses
- Visiting cafés
- Walking dogs
- Exercising
- Watching street performers

The city isn't a backdrop.

The city is the gameplay.

Becoming a Mimic

At the beginning of every match, each Mimic is assigned a random civilian identity.

For the entire match they become:

- A tourist
- A chef
- A teacher
- A gardener
- A delivery worker
- A student
- A musician
- Or dozens of other civilian types

Their appearance matches the NPC population perfectly.

To everyone else, they simply look like another citizen.

Detective Gameplay

Detectives patrol the city searching for clues.

They investigate:

- Witness statements
- CCTV footage
- Footprints
- Suspicious movement
- Crime scenes
- Civilian reports

Every detective chooses one special investigation tool before the match begins, such as a drone, motion sensor, thermal scanner, or evidence analyzer.

These abilities have limited uses and recharge over time, encouraging teamwork rather than ability spam.

Mimic Gameplay

The Mimic's greatest weapon isn't strength.

It's patience.

The best Mimic doesn't run.

They don't panic.

They walk with the crowd.

They stop at traffic lights.

They browse shop windows.

They sit on benches.

They wait for buses.

They look completely ordinary until the perfect moment arrives.

Living Investigations

Every match is procedurally generated.

Different:

- Civilian routines
- Weather
- Time of day
- Events
- Witnesses
- Clues
- Escape routes
- Objectives

No two investigations play exactly the same.

Dynamic City Events

The city constantly changes.

Examples include:

- Heavy rain reducing visibility
- Street festivals creating massive crowds
- Power outages disabling cameras
- Rush hour increasing traffic
- Construction blocking roads
- Police checkpoints
- Fire drills evacuating buildings

Players must adapt their strategies as the city evolves.

Detective Progression During a Match

Saving civilians and collecting evidence earns Investigation Points.

These unlock temporary team upgrades such as:

- Better surveillance
- Faster clue analysis
- Police drones
- Helicopter searchlights
- Temporary district lockdowns

Every rescue helps the detective team.

Mimic Gadgets

As the match progresses, Mimics unlock cartoon-inspired gadgets that help them escape or create confusion.

Examples include:

- Portal Gun
- Smoke Bomb
- Pogo Stick
- Speed Shoes
- Cardboard Box
- Banana Trap
- Confetti Bomb
- Fake Witness Device

These gadgets are designed to create memorable moments rather than realistic combat.

The Art Style

Mimic City uses a colorful, low-poly art direction.

Every character is built from a single modular body with interchangeable:

- Hairstyles
- Hats
- Glasses
- Clothing
- Shoes
- Backpacks
- Accessories

This creates thousands of unique-looking civilians while keeping the visuals clean and easy to read.

The tone is playful, humorous, and accessible.

A Typical Match

A detective receives a witness report describing a suspicious tourist.

Another detective has already been watching that same tourist but never saw anything unusual.

The tourist waits in line at a coffee shop.

Walks to a park.

Feeds birds.

Nothing seems out of place.

Moments later, another incident occurs nearby.

The detectives compare notes.

The tourist has appeared near every location.

One detective decides to follow.

The tourist notices.

Without running, they calmly merge into a crowd leaving a train station.

Now there are fifty identical-looking civilians.

The detectives have seconds to decide.

Did they lose the Mimic?

Or are they still watching them?

Every match creates stories like this naturally through player behavior.

Long-Term Progression

Players unlock cosmetic rewards including:

- Character outfits

- Hats
- Emotes
- Victory poses
- Backpacks
- Pets
- Footstep effects
- Player titles

There are no gameplay advantages tied to progression.

Skill and observation always determine the outcome.

The Vision

Mimic City isn't about eliminating opponents.

It isn't about having the strongest weapon.

It isn't about memorizing roles.

It's about creating unforgettable moments where detectives slowly piece together a mystery while one player desperately tries to remain just another face in the crowd.

When a detective finally points at a completely ordinary civilian and says,

"That's not an NPC."

—and they're right—

that's the moment Mimic City is built around.
